Aphrodite

Aphrodite Baths is a special place, a magnificent source located on the eastern slope of Akamas. It combines the myth with the natural beauty of the landscape and offers peace and tranquility to the soul of the visitor.

According to myth and local tradition, here was the Baths of Aphrodite. The place where the goddess of beauty and love enjoyed her bath, just as Adonis first appeared and become an irreplaceable lover.

THE KINGDOM

The beauty of the landscape, which is described by many older travelers, combined with the overall wild magnificence of Akamas, establish it as a favorite place, where the goddess of love had her kingdom.

THE MAGIC OF MARRIAGE

The name of Aphrodite Baths is mentioned first by Athenaeus (170-230 AD), speaking of the plant, which, as he writes, grows in the baths of his goddess of Love, in Cyprus and Limnos. He adds that Aphrodite was bathing in these baths after laying with her husband, Hephaestus.
The raised wedding platform gives the impression that it is flying! Surrounded by a natural Mediterranean decoration, the blue sea, the blue sky and the beauty of the scenery, the sight of Aphrodite will make your special day unforgettable!

THE PARADISE

The wedding ceremony at the Aphrodite Baths, with a spectacular view of infinity with the sun slipping across the Mediterranean is described by many as an ideal view of paradise.

Aphrodite Baths

THE HISTORY

- According to Greek mythology, Aphrodite was married to Hephaestus, the metallurgist of the gods.
- This myth probably came from the connection between Cyprus and metallurgy, namely copper.
- It is said, however, that Hephaestus built a palace of gold and gems for Aphrodite, in an idyllic landscape somewhere on the island, perhaps in Akamas.
- Claudian refers to two sources, one of which mixes her water with honey and the other with poison. From these sources, he says, the goddess of Love was hit by Cupid's arrow, which is why his shots are sometimes
